FRENCH, ENGLISH AND NEW YORK FASHIONS IN DRESS.

A Unique Costome for Ladies Addicted to Cycling and Other Open Air Exercises-Made Polonaise of Gray Tweed

In the secondarying cut is shown a new model that can havely fail to please ladies addicted to outdoor sports. The dress il-

It is made a to polonaise in gray tweed or navy blue serge. It is fastened on the left side with bone buttons, and three rows of mohair braid appear around the bem in front of the skirt. The collar and revers roll back and expose a shirt of white flannel. The belt is of leather and the peaked cap is of white twilled linen.

Glores for Country West. Doeskin gloves are much worn in the country by society women. They have the large born buttons and pique backs. It is almost impossible to have too large buttons on country gloves. Chavrette gloves have been for years in favor, and are likely to remain so, and none more than the "plunged" and the Cape chevrette, specially prepared for walking, riding and driv-ing, made with black and Paris points; they accord well with tailor made gar-

Chevrette Suedes are a new, useful class of glove, especially the monsquetaires, in tans, black, tobacco and grays, some having embroidered backs; stone colors and a long list of delicase tones are to be had in Sueds. Those who need traveling, boating, tennis and seaside gloves should look at the cheap white or tan castors if money is an object. The tan, drab and gray doeskin are far preferable, and these are to be or they will break badly; fill up the jars bought in the mousquetaire cut—viz., with buttons at the wrist, pique sawing being a characteristic of a good class of chevrette. With plums, pour in the scalding sirup until it runs down the sides and seal. Greengages are very fine put up in this These gloves never are and never can be cheap, but they are the cheapest in the end. Rossia leather gloves are a novel idea.

There is an art in putting on gleves which has to be borne in mind, as much of their subsequent wear and fit depend upon it. They should be turned back below the opening. First, the fingers should be in-serted and well worked in, then the thumb, and afterward the entire glove drawn on from the back only.

The New Handkerchiefs.

The new handkerchiefs, like the new stockings, have very conspictions patterns. The edges are embroidered in Japanese designs with birds or chrysantheniums. Another handkerchief has one corner The following transfers of real estate the owner's monogram. There are hand-kerchiefs entirely of Valenciennes lace. front of the bodie or for millinery.

Morning Gowns and Poodles.

We present the annexed cut quite as much with a view to giving the latest advance, and a longer time if the affair is styles in trimming poodles as to show the to be formal. The invitation may be writtasteful rose colored cashmere morning ten thus: dress. Poodles, be it understood, are the most pampered dogs in existence, and when once a young lady becomes the possessor of a poodle she immediately en-deavors to decide which of the dozen ways of trimming she shall select for her own special pet.

A poodie is sometimes ornamented with stars or dinmonds, or stripes of fur. The little knobs on his tail and legs are cut as a matter of course. Sometimes he will have a rope of fur over his otherwise offensively bare back, or a diamond will orna-ment the middle of his spine. The fashionable color of a poodle is black, but as

FASHIONS IN GOWNS AND IN POODLES. nature won't attend to fashion a poodle has sometimes to be dyed. Brilliantine is used for this purpose. When rain comes of course the dyed poodle must be hurried

The rose colored morning dress depicted is set off with loose plaitings of green pougee silk lined with pink, which are carried along the V shaped opening of the bodice and around the wrists. The such is in green moire ribbon. The open bodice is filled in with a chemisette of white cashmore, and the semi-loose sleeves are headed with double puffings.

Fashion Echoes. Alpaca has been one of the most popular materials for street dresses this summer. Tea gowns have lost their neglige look.

They resemble dresses as closely as possi-As for men's socks, they are very guidy now in colored stripes. Gines have a shot effect, these are for evening wear. Some are facked with color, gold thread indeed is introduced into them.

wrecked by imagination are really fewer than is commonly supposed. Now and again some orratic genius of highly strung nervous temperament gives aimself up to the pleasures of imagination till he be-comes intexicated with them and staggers over the boundary of amity; botfor one case of insanity caused by excess of imagination there a dozen oaused by want of it. Apathetic duliness and torgor of mind are apt to deepen into dementia. A vulgar error as to the nature of insanity has perhaps conduced to exaggeration as to the dangers of imagination. Visitors to asylums invariably arrive expecting to find growths of morbid invention and be-lief, wild, tangled and invariant as a propical forest, and leave much disappointed by the barrenness of the land, for the insane are the least imaginative of beings. At rare intervals a madman is encountered who dasmies all around him by the me-teoric brilliancy of his conceptions; but, as a rule, the lunatic is se dull as a stone. He is the victim of a fixed ides, or his delusions pursue a threadmill round, or oc-cur in groups so unvarying that, if you have ascertained one of them, you can pre-diet all the rest. His mind is a blank or a blurred and unreadable page, or his fan-cies, if they come thick in the turnuit of mania, are so disjointed or huddled to-gether as to defy recognition.

Idiocy is the absolute negation of im-agination, and insmity undermines and destroys or enfeebles it more or less, and when we try to drive out insunity the first thing we do is to invoke imagination's aid, for moral treatment consists mainly in appeals to this faculty, and fully acknowledges its hygienic uses.

The first recorded cure of melancholia was by the harp of David, and today in every lumntic hospital worth the name persistent efforts are made by music, by pic-tures, by poetry and the drama to stimulate the imagination and thus "cleanse the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff that weighs upon the hears."

Nutrients in Right Proportion.

The New York Grocer says that the fried fishballs or the brown bread and baked beans of New England are found to contain nearly the right proportions of nutrients required to maintain an adult work-ingman in proper condition, according to Voit's standard. The pease porridge, sea-soned with savory herbs, in which a little hit of pork is stewed, is also consistent with that standard, as are the hog and hominy of the southern negro, in the proportions in which it is served -one peck of meal to three and one-half pounds of bacon for a week's supply.

One Thing and Another.

Oatmeal drink is much recommended to those who are undergoing great bodily labor. Boiling water poured on oatmeal and flavored with lemon peel. To remove thirst paint the tongue of a

A little rose scented glycerine in the water of the bath will impart freshness and delicacy to the skin.

Mrs. Lewis Wilson, AT BORR

Nov. 18, from 3 until 6.

This invitation may be written on a calling card, inclosed in a white envelope and delivered at the house, if in the city. At the hall door a servant should be staed to admit each guest before she has had time to ring. This servant also directs the way to the "nurching room," where the wraps are removed by another servant who takes charge of them and assists in various ways. The bonnet and gloves are almost invariably worn, the gloves to correspond with the rest of the toilet in tone. The only ones privileged to appear unbonneted in a large reception are the ladies receiving with the hostess or assisting her to entertain her guests. They should always be bareheaded. Street dresses or the plainer

The hostess should stand pear the entrance of the reception room and extend a welcome to each one as she arrives, and the guest should then be introduced to others in the room, especially if she be a stranger. In that case an unusual amount of sitention should be given her. A guest can go at any time after the lunch has been served, but under no circumstance remain longer than the appointed time. In the winter time the house should be darkened, and lighted by gas, candles or lamps.

At a large afternoon reception the guests are invited out to lunch in parties at dif-ferent times by an assisting frend of the hostess. The hostess herself never takes refreshment, except at small and informal receptions, where all sit down at lunch at the same time. Usually an unmarried lady sits at either end of the table, who pours the tea, coffee or chocolate.

In taking leave of the hostess such guest should in a few words express her enjoy-ment at being present on this occasion, then pass out, and after putting on wrops depart without going into the reception room acmin.
